ABOUT THE SCHOOL

Great books are the bedrock of a St. John's College education. At this Annapolis institution (which also has a campus in Santa Fe, New Mexico), the interdisciplinary curriculum is based around important books and ideas of Western civilization "fostering the best educational experience any lover of learning could ask for." All students share the same course of study—"the Program"—fully conducted in seminarstyle courses in the humanities, literature, and philosophy with three years of laboratory science, four years of math, three years of language, and two years of music. Students "don't memorize formulas, we learn the logic and reason through the steps." Professors are called tutors here, and they are "always thoughtful and well-spoken, incredibly intelligent, and interested in being a part of the community." St. John's is "unique in its approach but is so oddly accessible," and its educational model really gives the student control. It "allows the student to solve problems and answer their own personal questions... in such a way that one truly feels empowered in one's education."

BANG FOR YOUR BUCK

St. John's was founded in 1696 and received its charter in 1784 and has a longstanding tradition of churning out incredibly bright, capable critical thinkers who have no aversion to hard work. In fact, 70 percent of students continue their studies after graduation in graduate or professional school programs. The college's financial aid program both rewards academic merit and recognizes financial need. To that end, St. John's awarded over $3.7 million in merit scholarships to students in the most recent incoming class. All students who apply are considered for merit-based scholarships.

STUDENT LIFE

The St. John's student body is unique because "our social and our academic [lives] are completely blurred." Due to the unusual nature of the curriculum, everyone has read the same books so socially, "most things revolve around the Program," and a popular student in this "curious bunch" is one who does their work. Campus boasts a smorgasbord of activities for eager students, including those put on by the Waltz committee, which organizes a ton of swing dances each semester. "The entire college (almost) knows how to swing dance." The school also has a "robust intramural program," as well as an intercollegiate croquet team for which the school is famous, and the community formed within "leads to many friendships that would not have happened otherwise." There is also a very active theater program, which usually holds four shows a year, and four publications on campus.

CAREER

Simply by getting everyone to talk to one another in their seminars, the Program "allows the community the freedom and opportunity to shape St. John's into what they want and need it to be," and even if career paths aren't as apparent, students leave happy. The Career Services Office is ready to help any student with finding an internship, application strategies for graduate programs, or securing research positions. Information sessions, workshops, and career and "experience fairs" showcasing student projects are held throughout the year, and a newsletter is published twice a month with information about career development opportunities, internships, graduate school, and life planning.
