

Real Thinking, Real Learning for Teachers

“Every teacher strives to create a classroom where real thinking and real learning are the essence of every student’s experience. Because of my studies in the Graduate Institute in Liberal Education, my classroom transformed into a dynamic educational environment where all of my students are challenged to think and learn for themselves. They are more active learners because my approach to teaching shifted. Instead of being the consummate authority, I’m now a fellow learner, guiding and focusing instead of lecturing.”

THE GRADUATE INSTITUTE NATIONAL EDUCATOR'S GRANT

St. John's College offers a special tuition grant for educators to pursue either of the college's graduate programs: the Master of Arts in Liberal Arts or the Master of Arts in Eastern Classics. The grant provides one-third of either program's tuition. Full-time public or private school teachers with at least three years of teaching experience are eligible for this grant, as well as administrators, curriculum developers, and other educational professionals.

To apply for the National Educator's Grant, teachers should submit a standard application to the Graduate Institute, complete the National Educator's Grant application, and provide a letter verifying employment as a full-time teacher. The National Educator's Grant is offered independently of financial need, so all applicants for this grant are encouraged to apply for additional federal student aid so that they can be considered for additional assistance through the college's Graduate Institute Teacher's Grant, a separate grant program.

ABOUT ST. JOHN'S COLLEGE

St. John's College, with campuses in Santa Fe, New Mexico, and Annapolis, Maryland, is an independent, four-year liberal arts college with no religious affiliation. Founded in 1696, it is the third-oldest college in the United States. The Santa Fe campus was established in 1964 and the Graduate Institute was added in 1967. The college is fully accredited by the North Central Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools. On its two campuses, the college enrolls approximately 900 undergraduate and about 180 graduate students per year.

The 36-acre eastern campus located in historic Annapolis, the capital city of Maryland, is within one hour's drive of Washington, D.C. and Baltimore, offering students rich cultural resources such as world-class museums, orchestras, and professional sports. The city sits on the edge of the Chesapeake Bay and is within a few hours of the beaches of the Eastern Shore and the mountains of Western Maryland and Pennsylvania, offering easy access to hiking, canoeing, sailing, swimming, and birdwatching.

Santa Fe, the oldest capital city in the United States, is located at an elevation of 7,200 feet. The city and its surrounding area offer students an exciting world to experience and explore – the Jemez, Sandia, and Sangre de Cristo mountain ranges, ghost towns, Native American pueblos, ancient ruins, extraordinary geological formations, and a legacy of Spanish and Native American art and architecture. Santa Fe itself is a center for art, music, and opera.

THE MASTER of ARTS in LIBERAL ARTS

The Liberal Arts Program of the Graduate Institute consists of four principal segments: Politics and Society, Philosophy and Theology, Literature, and Mathematics and Natural Science. A fifth segment, History, is periodically offered as well. Although the curriculum is divided into these five areas of study, it transcends disciplinary boundaries. The books studied in any one of the segments have important things to say about many different aspects of life, and most of them could appropriately be read in other segments.

Students enroll in one segment, and nine credit hours are earned upon completion of each. Segments can be taken in various sequences. Teachers who work during the traditional academic year can attend the Graduate Institute and complete their master's degree in four summers.

THE MASTER of ARTS in EASTERN CLASSICS

Over three consecutive semesters on the Santa Fe Campus, students in the Eastern Classics program examine the thought of ancient India, China, and Japan while studying either Classical Chinese or Sanskrit. The goal of the program is not an in-depth knowledge of any one tradition, but a basic introduction to the breadth and richness of these traditions, and an exploration of how the conversation among them lends insight into the fundamental and enduring questions of humanity.

A GENUINE LIBERAL ARTS EDUCATION begins with a shared understanding of the ideas and questions that help define our intellectual heritage. At St. John's College, students of many ages and backgrounds cultivate the liberal arts through direct engagement with the books in which the greatest minds of civilization have expressed themselves.
